

'embarrass' also means embarrassment but I'm fairly sure madame P has yet to be informed of her sister's condition

Confusion were visible. When the meal was over I went to warm myself in the kitchen a moment: "Mademoiselle Carnille," she said to me, "I have sent for the medicine the doctor prescribed. But he will not return; I am absolutely opposed to it. ^{very formal} I'm totally against it what did such an order, given by her, ^{from her} signify? Did she know something, and fear to know more? This is what ^{I asked myself}

^{this without actually giving her a reply}

I asked myself without responding to her. When we went to bed, Sara told me that the doctor had had a long chat with her mother. But that was all. It was enough to fill me ^{don't really need to indicate this grammatical gender. Sara's feminine} with fears that my friend shared with me!!! I later learned ^{were shared by my friend} that, during that intimate chat, the doctor had asked Madame

P... a plethora of delicate questions about me without overtly explaining his ^{who} ^{reasons} motive. She had barely replied, ^{being incapable of} not being able to believe the thoughts that motivated these questions. Suspicion ^{repetition} her soul wasn't open to suspicion.

She couldn't bear it could not enter her soul; it would have been terrible; she rejected it wholeheartedly. [Faced with such blind obstinacy,
